INTERPRETATION OF FINDINGS & FURTHER RECOMMENDATIONS

The radiographic study reveals a moderate bronchial lung pattern compatible with chronic bronchitis, small airway disease, or less likely age-related changes. Allergic lower airway syndrome is considered most likely; however, chronic bronchitis cannot be ruled out entirely.

REFERRING VET

Rodriguez

The atelectasis of the right middle lung lobe is likely a consequence of chronic small airway disease with mucus plugging. Correlation with pulmonary auscultation and possibly bronchoscopy with BAL could be considered. Ensure proper oxygenation and minimize stress.

A trial of treatment for feline asthma could be considered, and anti-allergic medication and the use of bronchodilators could be considered as well.
